

TEN YEARS In The Making

A Custom Plan Leads to a Family-Friendly Contemporary Home

The builder and homeowners initially met in 2002 when the homeowners moved to Midland from out of the country. Because of the long distance, the homeowners viewed the advertised “spec” house online, traveled once to personally view, and then completed the entire purchase online.

During the ensuing years, the owners continued to tour the Parade homes built by Rob and Lori Wright of Wright Builders Inc. Most were custom built for other clients, which gave them an opportunity to become familiar with multiple home designs. In 2008, they toured a house that grabbed their attention because the floor plan seemed so well suited for their family. They combined their efforts and customized the plan entirely to fit their family. Ten years from their initial meeting, this dream home was completed.

The exterior was changed completely to lower the rooflines. A wall was bumped here, a bay added there, along with the re-invention of other areas until the design was perfected. The result is a home with contemporary styling and clean lines. “We wanted a home that reflected and integrated the needs and wants of our family life, along with our personal style and heritage,” shares the lady of the house.

The exterior is clad with an off-white masonry brick. It has a solid mahogany entry door with a sleek, stainless door pull and frosted glass sidelights. The metal address plate was customized and powder coated to match the finish of the exterior light fixtures.

The house is located on a secluded pond. When entering through the front door, the large windows offer a view of the pond, which is within close proximity to the house. This delightful surprise is accentuated by the completely visible backyard hardscape design that includes a small, covered porch.

The interior, with its bold color selections, creates the “wow” factor. The great room and dining room colors are pulled together with a vivid leather sofa, distinctive window treatments, and an array of contemporary and unique furnishings, including art.

The lower level is another house! After passing through a set of glass doors, you enter a recreation room with plans for a kitchenette. Pass through another set of doors, and you find yourself in a large sitting room for the bedroom complete with walk-in closet.

Down the hall is a wall of storage shelves and closets, leading to an exercise room that is sure to energize with its lime green walls. Of course, this space would not be complete without its own bath.

The house was constructed using a vast array of insulation products produced by the Dow Chemical Company. The roof is wired for the future installation of solar shingles. There was a tremendous amount of effort put into energy efficiency for this home. As a testament to its effectiveness, the January, 2011 energy bill for this 7,500-square-foot home was $405.00.

Don't let the minimalist feel with its very sleek, very clean lines fool you. This home has all the amenities—including the luxury—that anyone could desire. □
